Islamic Perspective on the Rights of Child: Their Consequences for the Roles of State and Civil Society (Especially in Education)

Abstract
Islam is a religion concerned with justice and respect. It is a religion that places great emphasis on rights and responsibility. Child has certain rights categorized into social, educational and financial rights. The social rights are divided into two categories: before birth and after birth. The social rights before birth includes right to noble parent having character and right to unborn child while the social rights after birth includes rights to lineage, suckle and nutrition, and being received by the Muslim society. The educational rights cover rights to life, general care and socialization as well as basic education, just and equal treatment, and physical education. The financial rights encompass rights to livelihood, property and inheritance. For enabling children to enjoy their rights guaranteed by Islam, parental care plays role as a main foundation. But state and civil society organization also have key roles to play in this regard. Child friendly education may be a manifestation of social responsibility of civil society organization to fulfill the rights of child.

Introduction
Children are great blessings from Allah. At the same time, they are amanah (or trust) from Him to us (the adults), and, then, should be accepted with joy and gratitude. However, children are not toys or possessions. With them comes great responsibility. Besides, a global consciousness has moved in The United Nations Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF) to develop Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in 1989 (UNICEF, 2004). But, we still currently show physical, verbal, or psychological violence, carelessness, discrimination and exploitation to the children. Beside, many parents in every society, regardless of creed, origin, social and economical status, have indeed lost their children as a result of their own negligence. They are so careless about the places their children go to, the friends they associate with, the time they spend with no benefit, and so on. This negligence of such parents causes the children to grow up without any responsible adult and without caring guidance and supervision. A solution for such problems has been made by UNICEF, establishing Child Friendly School (CFS) Program. Its manual was launched in 2009 (UNICEF, 2009:1-2).

The responsibility to fulfill the rights of the child also belongs to society, especially civil society organization (CSO), such as Muhammadiyah, an Islamic CSO established by Ahmad Dahlan in 1912, to improve the quality of Indonesian society through many life aspects, especially in education, healthy, and social welfare. Universitas Muhammadiyah Surakarta (UMS) is one of high education institutions belonging to Muhammadiyah. One of its faculties, the Faculty of Education and Teacher Training (FETT), in cooperation with Lund University (LU), Sweden, has developed CFS program for several years in many Muhammadiyah schools.

As the Islamic high education, it makes sense if UMS develop each of its programs based on religious values in order to be ibadah (devotion) to the God, the Almighty and the Merciful. Then, it must be appreciated that in this 1st International Conference on Child Friendly Education, there is a subtheme titled “Religious Perspectives on the Rights of the Child”. This paper is being to describe Islamic perspective on the rights of the child and their consequences for the roles of state and civil society—especially in education. The roles of parent are not mentioned explicitly because description of child’s rights should include the obligations of his/her parent. Each of child’s rights is actually an obligation of his/her parent and vice versa, and behind each obligation there is implicitly role.

STUDY METHOD

This study is just a literature review, based on documents in gathering data and content analysis in analyzing data. Some data refer to two main sources of Islamic teachings: Al-Qur’an (Allah’s words) and Hadith (words, deeds and approvals of the Prophet Muhammad). Quotations from verses of Al-Qur’an are just their translations in English, not mentioning the verses due to easiness in looking for them. But, quotations from Hadith refer either to their texts in Arabic or their translations in English due to difficulty in looking for the texts of Hadith in Arabic.

CHILD’S RIGHTS IN ISLAM

To begin a discourse on the rights of the child in Islamic perspective, the following anecdote must be known:

“One day a man came to Umar ibn al-Khattab to complain of a disobedient son. So Umar had brought the boy to him and he blamed him for his disobedience. Then the boy addressed Umar by saying ‘O Commander of the faithful: Are there no rights for a boy against his father?’ Umar said, ‘Yes’. Then the boy said, ‘What are these rights O Commander of the faithful?’ Umar said, ‘To choose a good mother for him, to select a good name to him, and to teach him the Quran’. Then the boy said, ‘O Commander of the faithful, my father has not accomplished any of these rights. As for my mother, she was a black slave for a Magian; and he has not taught me even one letter from the Qur’an’. Then Umar turned round to the man and said, ‘You came to me complaining disobedience on the part of your son, whereas you have not given him his rights. So you have made mistakes against him before he has made mistakes against you.” (Arfat, 2013: 299)

From such an anecdote, it is very clear that the child has his/her rights which become his/her father’s obligations as a family shepherd; to violate child’s rights is to disobey Allah. Furthermore, whereby family is the nucleus of society, the last has also responsibility in fulfilling the rights of child. The Prophet Muhammad said, as quoted by Arfat (2013: 299-300), “The Muslim community would earn a name among other communities for its kindness to children.”

Besides, it must be recognized from the beginning that the child in accordance with the Islamic perspective means both male and female. Although Islam prefers boys over girls in terms of inheritance, aqeeqa (slaughter of two lambs upon the birth of a male baby, and one lamb only for a female baby), and other matters—all based on difference of responsibility, but both male and female are alike in the sight of Allah. Both, again, are equal in religious duties, except for certain exceptions that are defined and illustrated by Allah in the Qur’an, or declared and specified by the Prophet Muhammad in his Hadith. Each, however, is prepared and equipped physically to perform certain duties and tasks being suitable to his/her nature (Al-Uthaymeen, 2000)

In Islamic perspective, there are many rights of the child. To simplify this study, let me use a categorization introduced by Hasan bin Khalid Hasan Al-Sindy (2008: 437). He categorizes them into three categories: social rights, educational rights, and financial rights. The social rights are divided into two categories: before birth and after birth.

Social Rights (before Birth)

Right to Noble Parent Having Character. In Islam a child’s right begins even before birth; in fact it begins before conception, being careful in choice for a spouse. The Prophet Muhammad taught us to choose righteous spouses. He told a young man to give preference to a woman who is pious and told guardians of young girls to

1 Prophet Muhammad, peace be upon him (PBUH), said, (النِّسَاءِ أَلْتِنَى، ﷺ )
give preference to that young man who are known for his religion and his character. Thus, a man chooses beforehand who shall be the noble mother having character of his children. Otherwise, a women chooses who shall be the noble father having character of her children. By choosing a noble mother/father for his/her children, both fulfill a right of their children even before they are born. (Stacey, 2010; see Al-Anis, 2013:16-18)

If a man and a woman have dedicated their lives to worshipping and pleasing their Creator, then the rights of any children they may have are automatically guaranteed. Worshipping Allah means obeying His commandments which include securing the rights of the child (Stacey, 2010; see Al-Sindy, 2008:444-447).

Right of Unborn Child. After conception, the right that Allah has described for unborn child, then takes effect. Once a child is conceived, he/she has the right to life. It is never permissible to abort the unborn or to terminate a pregnancy because one fears being unable to financially support a child or another child. It is Allah, who is the Provider and Sustainer of all life. The persons who kill their children, prior or after their birth, are prescribed as lost, misguided and ignorant. The killing of the children is even a great sin. Moreover, the father should do everything in his power to preserve the life of the unborn child. (Arfat, 2013: 300; Stacey, 2010; see Al-Sindy, 2008:447-452).

Social Rights (after Birth)

Right to Lineage. It is the right of the child to have a legitimate birth (being born from the parent who are legally married. The birth outside of wedlock deprive the child from this right. When the child’s parent are unknown, other parents may not claim parenthood of him by way of direct or indirect adoption. The Qur’an states that the adopted child is not the real offspring of the adopter. He is just the brother in faith and the client of his fellow Muslim. The adopted child must be related to his true procreator when he is known or knowable. An orphan is also never to be denied his original identity. This right includes the need to trace one’s genetic lineage for medical purposes, which also forms the basis for the concern associated with incestuous marriages/relationships. (Arfat, 2013:302; Stacey, 2010; see Al-Sindy, 2008:444-447, and Al-Anis, 2013:21).

Right to Suckle and Nutrition. Following birth, a child has the right to be suckled by his/her mother directly until he/she attain his/her full power and strength, for the suckle has a great impact on the growth and development of the child. If the mother die or suffer from an ailment preventing her suckling, or if the infant refuses to take her suckle, the father has a duty to find someone to suckle his infant even if she has to be paid. (Arfat, 2013:301; see Al-Sindy, 2008:453-455, and Al-Anis, 2013:19-21).

7. Allah said, “… nor has He made your adopted sons your real sons … Call them (adopted sons) by (the names of) their fathers, that is more just with Allah. But if you know not their father’s (names, call them) your brothers in faith and your freed slaves.” (The Noble Qur’an 33:4-5).

8. Allah said, “The mothers should suckle their children for two whole years, (that is) for those (parents) who desire to complete the term of suckling, but the father of the child shall bear the cost of the mother’s food and clothing on a reasonable basis. No person shall have a burden laid on him greater than he can bear. No mother shall be treated unfairly on account of her child, nor father on account of his child. And on the (father’s) heir is incumbent the like of that (which was incumbent on the father). If they both decide on weaning, by mutual consent, and after due consultation, there is no sin on them. And if you decide on a foster suckling-mother for your children, there is no sin on you, provided you pay (the mother) what you agreed (to give her) on reasonable basis. And fear Allah and know that Allah is All-Seer of what you do.” (The Noble Qur’an 2:233).
Once a child is strong enough and past the nursing stage, the parent must provide appropriate nutrition to sustain continued growth. It is also the duty of parent to take every protective and precaution treatment, including vaccination, to prevent their child from falling ill. Moreover, if the child is ill, his/her parent should treat him/her medically. Treatment against disease serves the purpose of shariah (Islamic law) with regard to preserving life. (Al-Azhar University and UNICEF, 2005:6; and Al-Anis, 2013:30).

Right to Being Received by the Muslim Society. In Islam, the birth of a child, male or female, is a cause for great celebration. There are a number of recommended rituals from the authentic traditions of Prophet Muhammad, PBUH, that are to be done to ensure that the newborn child is received properly by the Muslim. However, the absence of any or all of these recommended actions does not negate any child’s rights in Islam. (Stacey, 2010).

It is recommended that the parents do tahnik—putting something sweet such as dates or honey into the child’s mouth—and pray for the newborn child. They are also recommended to recite softly azan (the call to prayer) into the newborn baby’s right ear. The first thing the child hears in this world, are the words of submission to One God. Beside, the newborn child is also recommended to be named on the seventh day after his or her birth. Names are important. Names have meanings and become symbols of persons. These meanings will have an effect on the child for good or for bad. The child, then, should be given a good name, and it is disliked to use names that have bad or distasteful meanings, or sound odd, or which would cause others to mock a person, or cause him embarrassment. (Al-Sindy, 2008:455-456; Stacey, 2010).

To complete the celebration in welcoming the newborn child, it is recommended that the parents do hadanah (giving the child his/her room), especially after growing and being circumcised. Welcoming the newborn child into the family and community is more than a celebration; the rights and rituals performed serve to remind believers that children in Islam have rights. Whether the parents are alive or deceased, known or unknown, present or absent, the child is entitled to be cared for and raised in security, surrounded by good environments and God’s love and laws. It is time to prescribe the educational rights of the children.

Educational Rights

Right to Life. To fulfill the child’s educational rights, there are some requirements, such as his right to life and general care. Islam has guaranteed the right to life for all human beings except for clearly defined crimes in the shariah due to which a person loses his/her right to life. During the 9 Abu Musa, one of Prophet Muhammad’s companions, said, (الله عليه السلام )، "I had a baby boy and I brought him to the Prophet. He named him Ibrahem, did tahweek with a date and prayed for God to bless him, then he gave him back to me." This hadith is reported by Al-Bukhari (No. 5730, Lidwa Pustaka Software).

10 Allah said, “… If anyone killed a person not in retaliation of murder, or to spread mischief in the land, it days of ignorance, some people used to kill their children due to superstitions and fear of poverty. Female children, especially, were considered a sign of weakness and humiliation for the family, so they used to bury their female children alive. Allah has prohibited and condemned this evil practice.\(^{11}\) (Arfat, 2013:301). Based on social environment wherein bullying, violation, sexual harassment and assault, and other crimes happen, the child’s right to life consequently means broader, that is to live in security and peace, and enjoy human dignity and protection under the responsibility of the parents, families, community and state.\(^{12}\) (Al-Azhar University, 2005:2, 8-9).

Right to General Care. Small child has his/her physical needs as well as emotional and spiritual needs. The parent, guardian and caregiver should bring their child up with good manners in all things, drinking, eating, dressing, sleeping, going out of the house, entering the house, riding in vehicles, etc.\(^{13}\) They should instill in their child the attributes of a good person, such as love of (personal) sacrifice, putting others first, helping others, nobility and generosity. Beside, the child must also be protected from physical harm and bad nutrition. (Stacey, 2010).

Right to Socialization of (Islamic) Values (Religious Training and Spiritual Guidance). This is the first and foremost of the child’s rights in Islam. Through religious training and spiritual guidance, the child has to internalize Islamic values and principles to save him/her in entire lives.\(^{14}\) Socialization primarily means to let the child knows his/her Creator, inculcates love for the Prophet Muhammad, faith in Hereafter, angels, divine books, prophets and other important aspects of Islam as a way of life, such as prayer (salat)\(^{15}\) and fasting (in Ramadhan). Beside, the parents and guardians should work to culture within their children the love for praised attribute of character and develop hatred within them against all aspects of bad character. A natural consequence of such socialization is absolutely purification of the soul. (Arfat, 2013:303; see Al-Anis, 2013:27-28).

Right to Basic Education. After the heart of the child being filled with faith, love and compassion, and his/her deeds being attributed with praised characters due to socialization of values, his/her mind should be entertained with proper knowledge and wisdom and his hands should be trained with vocational and practical aspects as—according to Ibn Khaldun—means of existence (quoted by Cheddadi, 2000: 10-11).\(^{16}\) It is the child’s right to basic education. In Islamic society, however, education is not mere right for its individuals, but an Islamic government indeed is required and demanded to prepare and provide all means that help individuals in the Islamic society to earn a better education.\(^{17}\) Moreover, Islam considers

11. Allah said, “... and kill not anyone whom Allah has forbidden, except for a just cause (according to Islamic law). This He has commanded you that you may understand.” (The Noble Qur’an 6:161).

12. The Prophet Muhammad PBUH said, (وَھُدِّيْنَا ﺑِعْرَضَةَ ﻣَأْذِنَةَ ﻛِتَابَةً ﻏَﺎرِيكُمْ ﻟَوْ يُرِيدُونَ ﻛُلَّا ﻣَآذِنَةً ﻛِتَابَةً ﻓِي ﭼُدْيَتْ) “The Muslim is a brother of the Muslim, he should not betray him nor belie him nor let him down. The whole of the Muslim is forbidden to another Muslim: his honor, his property and his blood.” This hadith is reported by Al-Tirmizi (No. 1850, Lidwa Pustaka Software).

13. Allah said, “… The father of the child shall bear the cost of the mother’s food and clothing on a reasonable basis.…” (The Noble Qur’an 2:233).

15. The Prophet Muhammad PBUH said, (وَھُمْ ﻣَوْنِسَاءَ ﺍٰسْتَرَوْلَهُمْ ﻃِلْبُ ﻋَﻠَیْهِ وَھُمْ ﻳَأْتُونَھُمْ ﺑِنَاءً) “Order your children for salat (prayer) when they are seven, discipline them for it when they are ten and separate their bads.” This hadith is reported by Abu Dawud (No. 418, Lidwa Pustaka Software).

16. Allah said, “… Say: ‘Are those who know equal to those who know not?’ It is only man of understanding who will remember (i.e. get a lesson from Allah’s signs and verses.” (The Noble Qur’an 39:9); Allah also said, “… And when you are told to rise up (for prayers, or salat (prayer) when they are seven, discipline them for it when they are ten and separate their bads.” This hadith is reported by Al-Tirmizi (No. 1850, Lidwa Pustaka Software).

17. That concept is based on what the Prophet Muhammad PBUH said, (سَوْى٠) “Seeking knowledge (better education) is an obligatory on every Muslim seeking a better education as a type of jihad (Islamic strife) that the Allah rewards. Furthermore, Islam considers withholding any useful knowledge that one possesses without sharing with others as unlawful. It is clear, then, that it is the basic right of every child to get better and beneficial education.

Right to Just and Equal Treatment. Children also have the right to be treated justly and equally. No child should be given priority or any type of preference over the others in terms of good behavior and kind treatment as well as in terms of gifts, grants, ownership or inheritance. An unfair treatment to children may result in bad behavior towards one another or both parents in the future or old age. (Uthaymeen, 2000; and Arfat, 2013:303).

Right to Physical Education. In Islamic perspective, as Ibn Sina—a very distinguished Muslim philosopher—said, education does not neglect physical development and everything implied by it: physical exercise, food and drink, sleep and cleanliness. According to him, the aims of education are the overall growth of the individual: physical, mental and moral, followed by preparation of this individual to live in society through a chosen trade according to his aptitudes. (Al Naqib, 1993:58). Islam, then, empowers physical as well as soul, including both of the child. (See Al-Sindy, 2008: 484-487).

Financial Rights

Right to livelihood (nafaqah). To fulfill the child’s rights mentioned above needs for the financial requirements. Shariah (Islamic law) has prescribed that the father has responsibility of such financial requirements (nafaqah). (Al-Azhari University and UNICEF, 2005:8). It is a duty of the parent to spend for their child’s welfare and well-being moderately.

Right to prosperity and inheritance. It is well-known that shariah (Islamic law) affirms the right of the newborn child to owning property and to inheritance. Moreover, the shariah has preserved such a right long before birth while still a fetus. If the father die while the mother is pregnant, the will (or inheritance) cannot be dispensed with until the child is born and its gender is determined. (Al-Azhari University and UNICEF, 2005:5).

THE ROLES OF STATE AND CIVIL SOCIETY IN SUPPORTING AND PROTECTING THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN

The Roles of State

For protecting children and enabling them to enjoy their rights guaranteed by Islam, parental care plays role as a main foundation. But society and state institutions also have key roles to play in this regard.

In order all children to acquire such rights without discrimination, the legislature must state unequivocally in their constitution... that each child has rights to a name identity, general care, socialization of values, property and inheritance, sponsorship in a family, healthcare and education. The legislature must also make laws that guarantee children protection from exploitation in harsh or dangerous jobs to other activities providing them responsible before the law. Lawmakers must also ensure children being protected from physical or moral humiliation.

It is also very important to be held international conventions, treaties and agreements relating to the rights of child. Such treaties and agreements are hoped not to contravene with the correct understanding of Shariah. They, then, are followed by the adherence of the state to them. The state is also needed to coordinate cross-border cooperation and combat internationally organized crimes that violate and endanger the rights of child. The state should also be asked to retrieve children either sold or smuggled across borders forced to flee into another country to seek refuge due to natural disasters or armed conflicts. (Al-Azhar University and UNICEF, 2005:11-12).

The Roles of Civil Society (and Child Friendly Schools)

The roles of state mentioned above in supporting and protecting the rights of child do not replace roles of civil society in this regard. It is a key task of civil society organizations to make parents aware of their duties in Islam, pertaining to protect their children and fulfill their rights. One effort to grow such awareness in society is to establish child friendly schools. Many rights of child, like the rights to general care, socialization of values, basic and better education, physical education, and just and equal treatment, can be fulfilled by such schools. It is better what can be contributed by Islamic perspective to the child friendly schools as quoted from Nasr (1988:153), describing Ibn Sina’s view on education as following:

“As for school, it is necessary because, not only does it make possible the transmission of knowledge, but it also provides a social ambience wherein students can learn from each other and live with one another. Ibn Sina emphasizes the importance of healthy rivalry and competition, as well as encouragement in attaining educational goals before other students. Moreover, the presence of other students make possible discourse and disputation, which increase understanding, and the making of friend, which helps to purify character and strengthen certain virtues.”

Beside, the civil society organizations also have the important task of monitoring and evaluating how well the state ensures the rights of child fulfilled in general or how well the child friendly schools ensure the rights of child carried out in special.

Children’s causes often appear in the mass media, and it is the duty of civil society organizations to help educating families in solving the causes and urge the state to adopt and solve such causes. Relating to the mass media, civil society organizations should monitor and report any incidents of child abuse, maltreatment, discrimination, exploitation, or violence.

The civil society organization can also play role in coordinating the payment the obligatory zakat (alms) and charitable donations by members and foundations in the society. Such obligatory zakat and charitable donations secure substantial amounts of money that may be used to fund many projects in fields of health, education and welfare for poor children, orphans and destitute families. (Al-Azhar University and UNICEF, 2005:12).

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

Islam as a holistic religion gives the child many rights and is concerned with physical, emotional, social and spiritual well-being. Child is a trust given to parent by God Allah. Child is to be well-fed, well-groomed, properly dressed for seasons and appearance. Child is entitled to religious learning, education and spiritual guidance. His mind must be entertained with knowledge and wisdom while his heart must be filled with faith and love. Not just does parent play role due to their obligations, but state and civil society also play role due to their social responsibility. Child friendly education may be a manifestation of social responsibility of civil society organization to fulfill the rights of child.

Besides, it is recommended to build a network between state and civil society organizations and between civil society organizations themselves in supporting and protecting the rights of child and to study specifically orphan’s rights not being described adequately in this working paper.
